Our Great Gift-Giving God

Christmas time. There is no other time of the year, as far as I am concerned, that can even begin to measure up to this joyous season. The sights and sounds, not to mention the food, all contribute to making this the most memorable time of the year. Is there anything more calculated to bring smiles to our faces than the way little children light up on Christmas morning? We love giving and receiving presents and this is the thing that we usually remember the most, long after the season has passed. In light of this consider the way the Bible accents this theme. “God so loved the world that he gave . . .” (John 3:16). “Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift” (II Corinthians 9:15). The Wise Men bowed before the Holy Babe and presented him with gold, frankincense, and myrrh (Matthew 2:11). “In these few lines,” wrote Wernecke, “we have the pure, unalloyed spirit of Christmas-giving which should and frequently does characterize the Nativity season. Giving to shut-ins, to inmates of hospitals and other institutions, to servicemen away from home – these and many more are expressions of unselfish giving. Boxing Day, while no longer observed commonly under that name, is with us in another form. Centuries ago it was customary in England on December 26 to give Christmas boxes to servants and those who performed public services – to tradesmen, mailmen, police, street sweepers, milkmen, cabmen, newsboys, and the like. Most of us recognize all these and others in modern form. Is it not common for employers to be confronted by not merely expectations of but demands for a Christmas bonus? But there is a third kind of giving that should be clearly distinguished from the above – the exchange of presents. While it, no doubt, constitutes the great bulk of Christmas merchandising (the Christmas trade being estimated at fourteen billion in 1950), it can, rightly used, be the means of establishing cordial, warm relationships in families and among friends.”¹

I. THE FATHER’S GIFTS TO HIS SON

“The Father loves the Son, and has given all things into His hand” (John 3:35). Notice the words “all things.” We read elsewhere in the New Testament of the Father’s donation to the Son (John 13:3; Matthew 11:27; Luke 10:22). What does “all things” (as in the ESV, or “everything” as the NIV reads) mean? The Angel Gabriel declares that “the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David” (Luke 1:32). He is given power and authority (Matthew 9:8; John 11:22; 17:2). Judgment has been handed over to Him (John 5:22, 27). Seven times He declares that believers have been given Him by His Father (John 6:37; 10:29; 17:2, 6, 9, 24; 18:9). Because the Father gave them to His Son, they are His and He will never lose any one of them (John 6:39) because He has given them to eternal life (John 17:2). The Father gave Him a work to accomplish (John 17:4) and He has completed it. “People do not come to Christ because it seems to them a good idea. It never does seem a good idea to natural man. Apart from a divine work in their souls (cf. John 16:8), men remain contentedly in their sins. Before men can come to Christ, it is necessary that the Father give them to Him.”² In John 17:7, Jesus says that the “all things” given Him are from the Father. This may sound a bit redundant at first, but consider this. God the Father is giving to the Son that which is His. It is impossible to give away something that is really not yours to give. The Father gives the Son His name (17:11, 12). The Son is here affirming that

He possesses the very nature and character of God. Likewise, He later declares the Father has given Him glory (17:22, 24). Part of that glory included the cross, whereby He brought glory to God and accomplished redemption (John 18:11). John Flavel asks, “Let it be considered, To what he gave him, even to death, and that of the cross; to be made a curse for us; to be the scorn and contempt of men; to the most unparalleled sufferings that ever were inflicted or borne by any. It melts our bowels, it breaks our heart, to behold our children striving in the pangs of death: but the Lord beheld his Son struggling under agonies that never any felt before him. He saw him falling to the ground, groveling in the dust, sweating blood, and amidst those agonies turning himself to his Father, and, with a heart-rending cry, beseeching him, ‘Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass,’ Luke xxii. 42. To wrath, to the wrath, of an infinite God without mixture; to the very torments of hell was Christ delivered, and that by the hand of his own Father. Sure then that love must needs want a name, which made the Father of mercies deliver his only Son to such miseries for us.”³

II. GOD’S GIFT OF HIS SON TO THE WORLD

James 1:5 says that God gives generously to all. A few verses later we read “every good and perfect gift is from the Father” (James 1:17). In Matthew 7:11, Jesus says, “Your Father in heaven gives good gifts.” Acts 17:25 declares that God “gives to all life and breath and all things.” God’s choicest gifts, however, are spiritual. The disciples, declares Jesus, are given the mystery of the Kingdom (Mark 4:11). It was the Father’s good pleasure to give this to them (Luke 12:32). Jesus gives them authority over the demons (Mark 6:7). Our Lord gives peace that is not of the world and can be known only by His own (John 14:27). The greatest gift is God’s gift of eternal life (Romans 6:23). This is supremely a gift of God’s grace (Ephesians 2:8). This was purchased by Christ who gave His life (living and dying) so that He might give eternal life to His own (John 6:27, 33; 10:28). God’s love is demonstrated in the giving of His only begotten Son (John 3:16). The nature of God’s giving His Son is described by the Apostle Paul in Romans 3:25 where God displays His justice and His love by giving His Son to be a propitiatory sacrifice for sin. There is simply no way to adequately describe this marvelous gift of God (II Corinthians 9:15).⁴

III. GOD’S GIFT OF THE SPIRIT

Over and over again we are told that we cannot receive anything unless it is given to us (Matthew 19:11; John 3:27). Contrary to popular teaching in many Evangelical circles, we cannot turn to Christ in saving faith unless we are efficaciously drawn by the Father (John 6:65); we do not naturally possess the capacity to receive the gift of God (Mark 8:12; John 19:9). God, therefore, gives the Spirit (I Thessalonians 4:8). It is the Spirit of truth who is given us (John 14:16-17). But He could not be given until Jesus was glorified (John 7:39).⁵ God gives us His Spirit as a deposit of what is to come (II Corinthians 1:22; 5:5) and for the assurance of abiding in God (I John 4:13).

CONCLUSION: Here at Christmas time, we give gifts to one another. There is nothing innately wrong with this. We are told in Acts 20:35 that “it is more blessed to give than to receive.” Ponder the words of Thomas Goodwin, one of the great Puritan writers, “That God should accept thee and me through his Son, and forgive us our sins through his merits, it is free grace. Thou art bought without any of thy money; it is free to thee. Though it cost Christ’s soul dear, it cost thee nought, as the phrase is, Isa. lii. 3, ‘You have sold yourselves for nought;’ it is free to us. Thus you see grace and Christ’s merits are reconciled. God takes a price, and yet he doth it freely.

“The more that God paid for to buy us, if it were his own he paid, the more grace it was to pay it. He gave his Son; he was his own, his only-begotten Son; he gave him, he gave him freely; he might have saved you without Christ’s satisfaction, that is certain. Christ, when he was to go to suffer, useth this as the utmost argument with God: ‘Father,’ saith he, ‘all things are possible with thee;’ thou canst save the world another way; if thou wilt, thou mayest forgive them freely without my satisfaction; let his cup pass from me. No, saith God, I will do it this way to choose; I will have thee to die for them. Well, saith Christ, 'not my will, but thy will be done.' Here is free grace more than if he had no satisfaction made, because his grace giveth this satisfaction. He hath redeemed us 'by his blood,' yet according to 'the riches of his grace.' (Ephesians 1:7)."⁶ May God help us all to take stock of the things we have received and may He grant to us an ever increasing recognition of His matchless gift of salvation which Christ has accomplished for us.

⁴ The Apostle Paul in this passage refers to God's grace as HUPERBALLŌ. This word means to throw beyond, to surpass. It literally means superabundant. It speaks of a degree which exceeds extraordinarily a point on an implied or overt scale of extent. See J. P. Louw and E. A. Nida, Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament Based on Semantic Domain I (United Bible Societies, 1988), p. 689. God's gift is further described with the adjective "indescribable!" This is the Greek word ANEKDIĒGĒTOS which declares that something cannot be expressed adequately or set forth in any great detail. The word translated "gift," DŌREA is also expressive. It means something that is freely given at no cost (cf. Romans 3:24; compare with Galatians 2:21, II Thessalonians 3:8). In John 15:25, Jesus uses the word when he says, "They hated me without reason." Here the word DŌREAN means "without cause or grounds."

⁵ "It is the dawning of the new age that was signaled by Pentecost, and that is why Peter's quotation of Joel's prophecy is so significant. According to all four Gospels, John the Baptist predicted that Jesus Messiah would usher in that age: he would baptize his people in the Holy Spirit. Jesus, especially in the Gospel of John, explicitly connects his death, resurrection, and exaltation with the coming of the Spirit. His return to the Father via the cross and the empty tomb is the necessary condition for the Spirit's coming (e.g., John 7:39; 16:7). Indeed, the Holy Spirit, that 'other Counselor,' is in certain respects Jesus' replacement during this period between the 'already' and the 'not yet' so characteristic of New Testament eschatology; he is the means by which the Father and the Son continue to manifest themselves to believers (e.g., John 14:23)."
